One of our readers has written in and asked about our article this week about our suggestion to get a low-end notebook to use for media purposes. The reason behind the question: he wants to get into Android-based media tablets or can you simply just use a laptop's tablet functionality. Well, we're big fans of touchscreen laptops and enjoy using our HP Envy 14 Spectre x360. However, the Envy has no screen dongle for connectivity, so there were some limitations. Then, we knew we wanted a lightweight notebook, so we bought a Asus Zenbook UX305UA. Here are our thoughts on using a hybrid convertible with a touchscreen for entertainment purposes: See how convenient it is to be able to listen to music while doing a little bit
